BLT Mat

The trusty GSM Ford Flex has seen just about 45,000-miles in its two years of service, and we've done well at keeping it in sharp condition. But there are some things that you just wonder, "What were they thinking," when they built it – like giving it a load floor of light-duty, light-colored carpet. We were forever using blankets and towels and cardboard to protect the floor from abrasions, stains and mishaps that take place on the load floor of a working wagon. While these were solutions, they were temporary, disorganized and unsightly – we were constantly seeking new cardboard or towels, wasting time and looking shabby. It was no good – so, we talked to our friends at BLT about a better solution, and they came through with flying colors with their Cargo Mat.

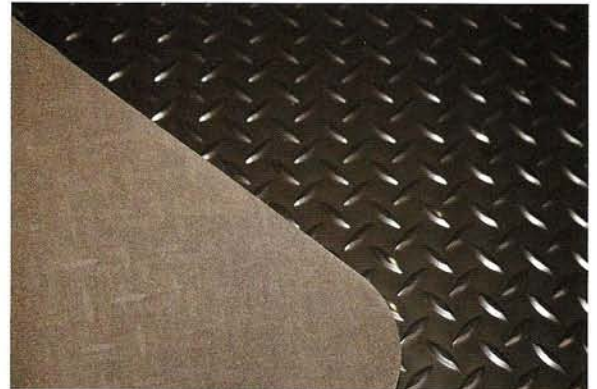

Made of a soft, foam rubber backing affixed to a black BLT vinyl top, the mat popped right into

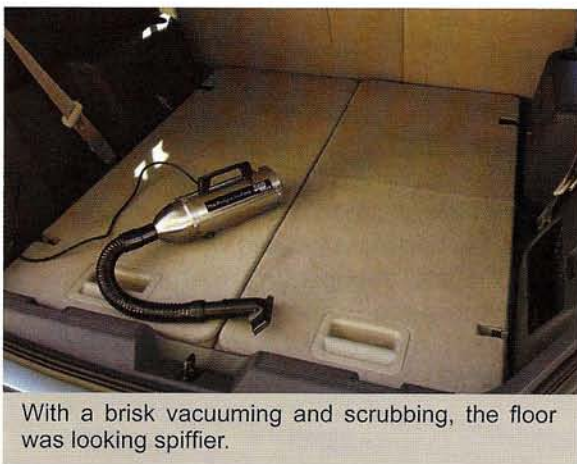

The light color of the Ford Flex's load floor was in constant need of cleaning, and the light-duty carpet was beginning to show signs of wear. We needed to stop that.

The BLT Cargo Mat popped right into place, and gave the Flex a more utilitarian look while providing protection from all the carrying we do with it.

The backside of the Mat is a foam rubber material providing the give and grip to protect the factory carpet and keep it from sliding around. The rubberized top helps keep items from sliding too, and looks sharp.

With a brisk vacuuming and scrubbing, the floor was looking spiffier.

place on the load floor, and covered it perfectly with only a few inches of gap on each side. The heavy duty vinyl is easy to clean, and stands up to everything we throw at it, and the 'give' of the foam rubber protects the factory carpeting and floor with ease. Why it took us 40,000-miles to think of this, who knows – but it's here, and we couldn't be happier. Interestingly, BLT manufactures vehicle, trailer, cargo and kennel liners to make life easier for various projects, and it's just a small sampler of things to come from the company in the future.
