

By Richard Cabeza

PHOTOGRAPHY: JOHN MATA, JR.

LOOKING DOWN

LAYING DOWN THE G-FLOOR

TECH SOURCES BOX

G-Floor RaceDay Peel and Stick Floor Tile
 bltllc.com

In so many words, this compact garage space sucked. It's a little on the small side, and well, look at it. It was mainly used for hoarding junk; so making it pretty wasn't really anybody's top priority. Most of the old crap that littered the garage was sold off at a yard sale, and it was time to reclaim the unused space, and actually put it to use.

We came across these cool RaceDay Peel and Stick flooring tiles from G-Floor. Not only would the flooring treatment look way better than the beat up concrete slab, but the tiles will provide a cushion to fight against fatigue, reduce noise, insulate, and the Diamond Tread pattern helps keep dirt on the garage floor, and not tracked into the house. Sounds good to us—let's get to work! MT

1 Before: The concrete floor was mopped and degreased to make for a good sticking surface. Once dried, it was given a good suck job.

2 Next, unpeeled 12x12 tiles were laid out to get the color pattern we wanted—a basic checker look.

3 Starting from the back of the garage, the tiles were peeled and applied to the floor row by row.

4 After: Yep, it was as easy as that. The part that took the most time was cutting tiles to fit against the wall, but that just involved simple measuring and snipping. Today the floor, tomorrow the rest of the garage!